

To Whom It May Concern,

I was excited to see your opening for the internship position and hope to be invited for an interview.

I am currently a sophomore at New York University, studying computer science with a minor in web programming. Through my classes at NYU, I have become proficient in several languages: Java, Python, Javascript/JQuery, HTML, CSS, MySQL, and PHP. Conceptually, I have learned to code using object oriented programming, data structures, and user input manipulation. In all of my computer science classes, I completed several individual and group projects, helping me learn to code independently and with a team. In addition to the knowledge I already have, I am very willing to learn new programming languages and skills.

Outside of coursework, I have experience interning at both small and large company settings. Currently, I am interning at Avex Designs, a creative agency with a focus on web design and development. I am responsible for both implementing code for client websites and taking initiative in making creative decisions. During the summer of 2016, I interned at the International Fellowship of Christians and Jews, a global non-profit organization based in Chicago. In this bigger company setting, I learned to contribute to a larger, more complex workflow process. At both internships, by experiencing real world application of the skills I learned in school, my coding knowledge not only grew, but also took on a more professional form.

In addition, I believe some of my strongest assets are being a quick learner, having good communication skills, and being highly driven. In all of my work experiences, I have been able to quickly adapt and adjust to the new setting, and form good relations with my coworkers. This has allowed me to always take on more responsibilities during internships.

I seek to gain even more experience and hope to contribute to this company. I am always seeking opportunities that will help me grow as a programmer. My passion for coding makes me eager to work for this company.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Ha
